Arizona State University presents Pandemic Dialogues, a new virtual series in the school’s Civic Discourse Project providing perspective on the current civic crisis through conversations among the school’s faculty and students, academic guests, and a wider community. During this time, they sought to sustain the intellectual community they’ve built with students, ASU colleagues, and the wider community.

They offer the Dialogues in three modes: a series of live webinars, each discussing a great work of philosophy or literature on pandemics and civic crisis; a student reading group, and a podcast series, discussing Camus’s novel The Plague.

This series features our own Professor Paul Crumbley in a webinar titled "The Masque of the Red Death and The Common Good". You can find this webinar in the Watch Previous Webinars section of the series.
