Capturing "Love in the Time of Coronavirus"

10/29/2020

Spicer-Escalante made sure the photos were taken with extreme safety measures in place to protect both him and his subjects during the process. Everyone wore masks and gloves with the pictures taken from at least six feet away, and the pictures were taken in places where the subjects felt safe.

“I am extremely grateful for the university’s support in this other creative side of my life and that these people allowed me to peer into their lives in such a difficult moment,” said Spicer-Escalante.

The exhibit will be featured at the museum through November 8th and is also available online.

Catch the online exhibit

Quick Links

Liberalis Home
Search Article Library

Recent Top Story

Share this Article

Related Stories

• Related Story 1
• Related Story 2

Get Involved

We would love your money! Feel free to donate lots and lots.

Donate Here
$(document).ready(function() { var relatedStoriesValues = $('#relatedStories').attr('hasvalues');
$('li', $('#relatedStories')).each(function(e)
{ if($(this).find('a').attr('href') == 'https://google.com' || $(this).find('a').attr('href') == 'https://danielle.ou.usu.edu')
{ $(this).hide(); } else{ relatedStoriesValues = true; } }); if(relatedStoriesValues == 'false') $('#relatedStories').hide(); } $('a', $('#donation')).each(function(e) { if($(this).attr('href') == 'http://chass.usu.edu/giving/index?area=freeMoney')
{ $('#donation').hide(); } }); });